

No Gluten Ingredient Listing

Dear Shoppers:

Individuals with celiac disease, non-celiac gluten sensitivity, gluten sensitivity, wheat allergy, and other conditions may find this “No Gluten Ingredient Listing” to be a helpful guide when shopping for groceries at Gelson’s.

Gluten is the protein that is found in wheat, rye, and barley (as well as some oats and possibly other grains due to cross-contamination). This listing distinguishes between two types of foods: (1) those that are guaranteed to be gluten free by manufacturers, which are marked with an * in this listing and may also have a “gluten free” tag on our store shelves, and (2) those that contain no gluten ingredients. People with celiac disease and non-celiac gluten sensitivity are advised to consume foods in the first “gluten free” category. For foods in the latter “no gluten ingredient” category, the ingredients listed by the manufacturer indicate that none of the ingredients contain gluten, but the foods do not state “gluten free” on their labels. These foods are included in this listing based solely on their ingredients. Sources of cross-contamination have not been investigated and foods may have been manufactured on equipment or in facilities that also process wheat, rye, and barley. In most cases, manufacturers take measures to avoid cross-contamination, but the only way to know for sure is to contact the company directly. Additionally, certain foods may contain no gluten ingredients and be gluten free but their manufacturers elect not to call them “gluten free” for various reasons, including possible risk of cross-contamination. These foods are included in the “no gluten ingredient” portion of the list.

Although wheat, barley, and rye-based foods are excluded, a gluten free diet can still be a healthful, well-balanced diet. Vegetables, fruit, nuts, fish, poultry, meat, eggs, milk, other dairy products, and certain grains are all naturally free of gluten and should form the basis of everyone’s diet. Potatoes, corn, peas, winter squash and sweet potatoes are starchy vegetables that can stand in for other starches in the diet, and gluten free grains such as rice, wild rice, quinoa, cornmeal, sorghum, millet, buckwheat and pure, uncontaminated oats can replace the forbidden grains. Since there is some risk of naturally gluten free grains being cross-contaminated with gluten, individuals who must strictly avoid gluten should seek out grains, flours and grain-based foods that state they are “gluten free” on the package. As with any healthy diet, though, minimally processed, whole foods should make up the majority of what is eaten. A cookie is never a health food regardless of its gluten content. Ideally, processed foods should only be a small part of everyone’s healthful diet, though we understand that they are not entirely avoidable.

To assist you in your gluten free diet planning, I have compiled quick-reference lists of grain-based foods that both are and are not allowed on the diet.

The following is a listing of grains and starches that are allowed on a gluten free diet. These basic foods are often used as ingredients in packaged gluten free foods and can be made into flours, cereals, pastas, chips, bread, baked goods, thickeners, binders, and fillers.

Naturally Gluten Free Foods:

Arrowroot*
Beans (including soy)
Buckwheat/kasha†
Cassava/Yucca*
Corn (fresh)
Cornmeal†
Legumes (including lentils and plain/salted peanuts only)
Millet*†
Nuts (plain/salted only)
Oats†
Potato
Potato flour*†
Quinoa†
Rice† (excluding rice mixes)
Seeds (plain/salted only)
Sorghum*
Sweet Potato
Tapioca*
Taro*
Wild Rice†

* These foods are found as ingredients in other gluten free foods.

†These grain-based foods are at risk for cross-contamination. People who cannot tolerate any gluten should only buy products that state “gluten free” on the package.

The following is a listing of grains and starches that are not allowed on a gluten free diet. These foods can be hidden in processed foods as flour, binders, fillers, starch, stabilizers, thickeners, preservatives and texture enhancers.

Foods Not Allowed:

Barley

Ale
Barley flour
Barley malt
Beer (unless labeled gluten free)
Brewer’s yeast
Lager
Malt
Malt extract
Malt vinegar
Malted milk
Sprouted barley

Rye

Sprouted rye
Triticale

Wheat

- Atta
- Bran
- Bulgur
- Cake flour
- Couscous
- Durum
- Einkorn
- Emmer
- Enriched flour
- Farina
- Farro
- Flour
- Graham flour
- Hydrolyzed wheat protein
- Kamut
- Pasta
- Seitan
- Semolina
- Spelt
- Sprouted wheat
- Tabbouleh
- Triticale
- Udon
- Wheat bran
- Wheat flour
- Wheat germ
- Wheat starch

Miscellaneous

- Commercial oats, oatmeal, oat bran, oat flour and other oat products
- Textured Vegetable Protein
- Unidentified Flour
- Unidentified Starch

People with celiac disease and non-celiac gluten sensitivity can only consume pure, uncontaminated oats in moderation (up to ½ cup daily). Gluten free oats are available at Gelson's. Consult your physician before including oats in your diet.

Since many minimally-processed and single ingredient foods are not a major concern for those following gluten free diets, this list does not include individual listings of certain naturally gluten free, nongrain-based foods, including: juice, sports drinks, water, alcohol (except beer and vodka), coffee, other beverages and soft drinks, spices (except dry seasoning mixes), pickles, olives, nuts (except seasoned), canned and jarred fruit, canned and jarred vegetables, canned beans, canned fish and meat, dried fruits and vegetables, frozen fruits and vegetables (some with sauce may contain gluten), ice cream and other frozen desserts, oils and fats, vinegars (malt vinegar contains gluten), regular deli (meats, fish, cheese), dairy (butter, milk, eggs, yogurt, cottage cheese) and fresh meat, seafood and produce. However, when applicable, shoppers should always read the ingredient lists on every food they purchase, every time they shop.

Always read the label—INGREDIENTS CHANGE. A gluten free diet requires that all processed foods become suspect, even if you have bought them before. Manufacturers sometimes change ingredients, so a food that was gluten free one week might not be so the next. Gelson’s shoppers who must avoid gluten can use the shopping list and shelf tags as a quick guide to help them identify a variety of packaged gluten free foods.

This list is only a guide to assist you with your gluten free shopping. The list and the shelf tags make no guarantees that a product will be completely gluten free, but it is a great starting point for those who need guidance in choosing gluten free foods. The sampling of products on this list has been compiled with the help of the Celiac Disease Foundation. We have made every effort to be accurate; however, Gelson’s and the Celiac Disease Foundation cannot be held responsible for individual reactions to any products. For further information on Celiac Disease, please contact the Celiac Disease Foundation at www.celiac.org.

Best of health,

Frozen Sweets

- Ice cream, frozen yogurt, sorbets and non-dairy desserts are generally gluten free.
- Varieties of ice cream and frozen yogurt that contain brownies, buns, candy bars, cobbler, cookies, cookie dough, cones and pie contain gluten. Always read the ingredient lists.

Grains & Beans

- All of the grains listed are naturally gluten free. However, people with celiac disease and non-celiac gluten sensitivity should only consume those that have an *, which means that their packaging states they are gluten free.
- Dried beans naturally contain no gluten ingredients, however if they are not specifically labeled “gluten free”, there is a slight chance of cross-contamination with gluten. To minimize this risk, pick over dried beans to remove foreign material and rinse thoroughly before soaking. Canned beans not labeled “gluten-free” should also be rinsed thoroughly, when possible.
